ELECTRONIC: Experimental, ELECTRONIC: Ambient Details: "Peter's Son" was named after Lewis Hurrell (2012)'s late father Peter Hurrell. Production started right at the time of the release of "vision" (2012's debut album) in late 2005 and has been in production for over a year. Even though Vision was a great first album, 2012 knows that Peters Son is going to blow it out of the water. The songs on the album are very different from one and other and that is exactly what 2012 has come to realize about the music. It's always different in one way or another, he can make a beautiful symphony with uplifting drum beats and melodies then turn around and make a dark masterpiece that sounds completely different from any of the other songs. That's the way he likes to create his albums. Most bands out there today sound somewhat the same on every song on an album. 2012 likes to break this cycle by creating a contrast between every track of an album, and even though the songs are different you can still notice that 2012 sound to them which is something not even Lewis Hurrell can explain, it simply happens.
