His first passion in life was the popular music of the sixties. One summer he and his friends decided to start a band, so he took up the drums. By the time he was sixteen he was pretty good at it too. Not long after that he started to write and play songs on the guitar. In January of 1974 he recorded "Sunny Afternoon" and "Looking Straight at You" in Kansas City with a group of studio musicians. Over the years he kept writing songs and occasionally he would go to a recording studio to record what he had written at the time. Now he has compiled these songs on a CD for you to hear and enjoy.
