Details: The Los Angeles-based Rock Doves were started in 2006 by singer/songwriter/bassist Noah Lowman and guitar player Jess Martinez. Influenced by the rhythms of reggae and other world music, along with the standard rock n roll and soul classics, Lowman set out to write songs that would incorporate many different musical styles into distinct pop sound. Working with drummer Jos Cano, the The Rock Doves recorded 10 tracks for their self-titled debut album. The first track, Baby Come Home, is probably the slowest track on the album but also one of the The Rock Doves favorites for its simplicity and catchy hook. It's a typical break-up song that the band likes to think of as belonging to the neo-soul genre. The next track, Amelie, draws its influence from a particular type of Mexican music called Norteño. On this song, Martinez, who grew up playing Norteño music, utilizes his quick picking technique to create the track's rich polyrhythmic structure. Riot, the album's third track, is a straight-ahead dance song whose lyrics seem to simultaneously encourage and caution against the excesses of the L.A. club scene. I'm Gonna Win This Time (Ha Ha) is the band's underdog anthem. With the contributions by drummer Alberto Avila and guitar player Manuel Sarian, and highlighted by Martinez's driving rhythm guitar, this fun and upbeat song tells the story of overcoming the odds. The Rock Doves show their political consciousness with the tracks Peace is Equality and Corruption. Both songs contain lyrics that are critical of dishonest government. While Peace has the feel of a reggae track in the mold of So Cal's Sublime, Corruption incorporates the Latin rhythm of Cumbia to give the track its pulsing urban beat. You Don't See has a particular Latin feel as well but features the heavily distorted guitar of Martinez that pays homage to the band's psychedelic rock influences. Other infectious tracks on the album include Everybody Move, The City, and Hey Mama, which is one of bands more popular songs and is highlighted by the trumpet playing of musician and sound engineer David Pea. All songs were recorded at Dapemo Studios in 2008 and produced by the Rock Doves. All songs were written by Lowman with additional help on Im Gonna Win This Time by Sariana. The Rock Doves play throughout the Los Angeles area. Show information and more about the band can be found at myspace.com/therockdoves. CONTACT: (310) 383-5752 or (323) 691-4013
