There is a point where one begins to run toward the light instead of escaping from the darkness a point where we save ourselves, realizing that we are in fact one. To love ones self is the only true love that exists. To love self is to love the other; and it is together that we will find that, in truth, we have always been one It is not important what we have done, where we have been, why, or how we got here. It is only important that we are here. We are not unique. We are not common, but we are now found. We believe that all great spiritual awakenings stem from great pain and suffering. In hindsight, you will see how painless all of it really was to now be in such a place of serenity. You will be healed when you realize you were always perfect. It was with these realizations, Vonrenzo headed back into the studio with a newfound passion for music and a new outlook on life. Songwriter Adam Luaces, alongside new members Nathan Brimmer and Pete Pidgeon, paired up again with producer/engineer Kyle 'Slick' Johnson, and the result was a journey of love and redemption, culminating in Indica Dove Sei (Indicate Where You Are). The new album was a huge departure from Vonrenzos first album of self-destruction. To say that Vonrenzo rose from the ashes is to understate the bands growth. Vonrenzos first album, Intention and the Adequacy of Delusion, was dark, gritty depressive. Indica is one of love, compassion forgiveness. Vonrenzo has known the dreamlike nature of existence and the dark side of life; and because of this, the band has an understanding and depth unseen in music today. All is love letting go, Vonrenzo
