WORD: Audiobook, JAZZ: Smooth Jazz Details: Born in 1981 in North Virginia, April McDonald grew up in a split household between her mother and father's home. A deeply loved and gifted child that was always determined, she learned to talk after only 5 months and learned to tie shoes at the age of three. Always the center of attention, her family acknowledged her as the super star. April knew since a child that she wanted to be in entertainment. While attending intermediate school, April played three instruments; the flute, clarinet and the violin, at present she is not practicing any of these instruments. Following her dream for theatre, she attended School of Performing Arts in Wilmington, Del. However, April had to place her dream for acting on hold due to restrained limitations. Years later, April pulled out her pen and pad and started formulating words along with a childhood friend that caught the attention of rap duo Das Efx, they were blown away by the than young duos rap talent. Unfortunately, this was not suffice to land them a deal. After a whirlwind of continuous efforts, April chose to try corporate America. She received her first part-time corporate job at the tender age of seventeen while finishing High School in Wilmington, Del. After graduation, April attended college in North, VA where she majored in Business Administration, eventually landing a job with a real estate brokerage, which sparked her interest in real estate, but this was not a primary passion for this creative artsy mind. In 2004, April relocated to Atlanta with the intentions on launching a daycare business with a partner. However, things did not go in that direction, April found her niche as a writer, she had ample time alone and a vast imagination, so she decided to utilize her time to write novels. She released her debut book entitled, Sex, Lies and Consequences in June of 2005, which proved successful it made the Best Sellers list in September 2006
