The album begins with the words "There was a mistake at the hospital when I was a baby / they send me home with the wrong family..." and by the time it reaches its conclusion, you've experienced the perspective of both a child and an adult, alternately sweet, uncertain, dark brimming with reckless energy. "Fever" is defined by Emily's commanding voice supported by a broad palette of acoustic sounds--ukulele, banjo, dulcimer, xylophone, metallophone, lush vocal arrangements her increasingly intricate guitar playing. All of her music is rooted in her love for live performance--in the last year she sang in a 50-member women's choir, curated a neighborhood house concert series, and toured solo with her ukulele on public transportation.
