At that moment she heard Shaddock burst out of the bushes. His shoes crunched on the gravel. Seconds later the sound stopped. He must be looking around, she thought! Then the crunching started again. Matlin's muscles tensed. The noise became louder. He was coming her way! She shrank further behind the table, crowbar at the ready. The moment the door lifted she would use it--hard! She'd have to anyway. Even with a crowbar she wouldn't stand a chance against that wicked-looking knife. Surprise would be her only advantage. Shaddock's footsteps stopped. Matlin almost yelped as something slammed against the side of the motor home. From the direction of the noise, she judged he must be at the door leading to the interior. He'd thumped on it. She now heard the door open. "I know you're in there, sweet Matty," he said, his voice sounding unbearably close. Then she heard the door slam, followed by the jangle of keys and the sound of one being tried in the lock. He grunted as it apparently didn't work. But the next one did. All too clearly she heard it turn, heard him try the door to make sure it was locked. He chuckled. "There! That'll keep you safe till I'm ready for you." She heard more footsteps on gravel. At least they weren't coming closer. What was he up to? Then she realized. Oh, God, no! Andreas! He's going for Andreas!

Matlin's life has already been turned into day upon day of terror, and the big blond man who helped her is possibly all that stands between her and death by murder. But now his life is also in danger--possibly helped along by her determination to keep her shameful past secret from him. For he lies unconscious in his own house, bound and gagged. And the nearest neighbour is miles away. How can Matlin save him, and herself as well, from the maniac stalking them? Author: Barker, Laraine Anne Publisher: Awe-Struck E-Books, Inc.
