Impinging upon the Morontial is an analog synthesizer music masterpiece with 7 years in the making. This CD debut is performed and produced by Aaron Esselstrom, age 32, living in Washington State. A multi-instrumentalist from youth, Aaron is a collector of analog and digital synthesizers and on this CD Aaron explores realms of sonic created virtual realities. Aaron has stated on occasions..."It is easy to create random sound design or noise, but it is different to make it musical". This unique analog synthesis presentation takes on a musical yet atmospheric approach to sonic moods and spaces. Mostly relaxing and sometimes a bit startling, these tracks cover sound explorations with a colorful almost story-like quality. Of course the use of ones' own imagination is necessary; not from a forceful way, this music takes you there itself. Sound wise, absent on this CD are tracks with long repetitions of electronic and other musical phrases without changes or direction. But instead there is performed music with evolving tones and composition. From one space and tone to another, from the ethereal to a storming rampage. It should bore few people, but for some people who are use to high energy music without slow transitions leading up to high intensities, may find this CD too slow. This CD is more of an experience to be had instead of instant gratification. After 45 minutes of diverse electronic tracks, the CD completes itself with an acoustic piano piece that complements the earlier tracks. Total running time is 55:00. This music is presently enjoyed by people of all age groups, personalities and temperaments. Good for reading, traveling, inspiration, personal time and other. The CD is a 3 sided high quality cardboard folding encasement (digipac) that folds into itself. It features original art works along with a description of the recording process from analog tape recordings to transferring all the music to digital. The term Morontial in the name of this CD is taken from a personal favorite book of mine, the Urantia Book. Morontial refers to levels of creation that mortals-of-time transcend after passing on in this world. To my surprise, most peoples reaction to seeing the word Morontial on the CD cover is to think of a moron, like referring to the CD as "Impinging upon being a Moron". There is humor there yes and possibly even some truth, "ouch". The first debut by Aaron Esselstrom (Captured Imagination) was in 1991, a solo record that included vocals, guitar, synthesizer and drum machine. This second new debut being sold exclusively at CD Baby.com, "Impinging upon the Morontial", is non-vocal but is instead a electronic derived journey, created through the use of analog/digital synthesizers. All the electronic sounds created are originals, not one sample is used except a grand piano sample on one track from a kawai MP9000. This has been crucial to create sounds from scratch for creating exact and precise timbres (in an electronic sense) to complete this musical and visionary passage. Enjoy Anyone interested in receiving a CD of the first debut from 1991 can receive one for 1.50 for the cost of the cd and shipping, when "Impinging upon the Morontial" is purchased first. Good blessings, and thanks for your time. Aaron Esselstrom CI Creations Recent listeners known by the artist say the following about Captured Imaginations second debut...
