Elegant, feminine acoustic folk with tinges of gospel blues. Stories straight from a warm open heart ranging from sensual to desolate. 13 MP3 Songs FOLK: Folk-Jazz, FOLK: like Joni Details: Expat Sydney double-bass player Liz Frencham, now settled in Melbourne, studied jazz bass at the Sydney Conservatorium of Music and went on to hone her considerable talents with festival favourites Jigzag, and later with songwriter/singer Fred Smith. JERICH0 is her first solo project, an album of personal, intimate songs recorded with the help of The Dream Seat, a large and varied collective of like musical minds and collaborators, or as Liz puts it... "the dream rhythm section, the most comfortable groove... a cohesion of different creative souls." This is very much a bass player's album, eclectic and varied, ranging loosely between jazz and folk styles - folk-jazz? - and obviously coming to us from a warm and open heart. There are some strong songs here - particularly Room at the Table, The Stronger the Tree, and Suitcase, a loving, hope-full song about moving to a new life in a new town to be with a new lover, which brings to mind the great English folk-singer Sandy Denny. But the real kicker here is the title track Jericho, a beautiful and flawless lesson in how to write the perfect three-minute song! The Last Record Store
