Details: JUTA TAKAHASHI was born in Miyagi, Japan in 1959, and then spent his childhood to teens in Aomori. At his teens, he was strongly influenced by so-called progressive rock and synthesizer music that had been assumed to be avant-garde at that time. He went to Tokyo for going on to school, and his career as a musician was started afterwards. Though he originally was a guitarist and played rock music like King Crimson's that valued improvisation, he gradually devoted himself to electronic music. He now resides in Sendai, Miyagi and is producing music by using synthesizers and computers as an independent musician. He received the major impact from electronic/ambient musicians, such as Brian Eno, Harold Budd, Vangelis and Pete Namlook, etc. Though his music is basically beautiful, calm, emotional and melodious, aggressive sounds that catch a glimpse of his original background also appear sometimes. Since he prefers analog instruments to digital ones, his works are characterized by the former. His music composition mainly consists of not programming but improvisation. The first commercial album was released in August, 2007, and four albums have been released at present. The fourth album of Juta Takahashi, entitled "Moonlit Flowers", has been released in August, 2008. The album contains following three ambient tunes. (1) Sadder Shore (1538) Ripples melancholily surge ashore at dusk. (2) Moonlit Flowers (1718) Moonlit flowers without name sway in breeze and sing in silence. (3) Pagan Chant (1958) You stray off a land of heresy and are captivated by the chant. There are beautiful and impressive sounds by analog synthesizers as usual. The album also features exotic flavors. Full previews are available at the official website.
