Pop melodies, punk attitude, rock power and cynicism and wit by the shovel-load. And all this with an added production nod to electronica. Come share our nightmare. We do home visits. 23 MP3 Songs

POP: British Pop, ROCK: Punk Details: Formed some time in 2004/2005 (dates like nightmares can be vague after the event), the clubs origins extend back to the mid 80s, when the would-be Electronic Music pioneers, now known as Barjeelik and Ttocs Plan met. They began making beats by whacking perpetual-motion toys against coffee mugs and recording the result into a 'Ram music-machine' sampler attached to a crappy 'Sinclair ZX Spectrum' computer. Discovering guitars and singing (It was all mute Ukeleles before them), they openly and knowingly welcomed the nightmare into their and our lives. Being a club open to all, they kidnapped the skills of UnhipKid through subliminal persuasion, voodoo djembe rhythms and remote influence, brainwashing him into assimilating his skills into the 'grand scheme'. What exactly this is remains unclear, with purchase of their cd being for most, the only faithful path into the nightmare they have constructed for us all. True leaders, they too live in a fear state of their own construction, forging ahead in the knowledge that a nightmare shared is a nightmare doubled. They would like to go on record as saying 'Welcome to the nightmare, it is dreadful to behold and wonderful to share'. And now they have.
