Ten folksongs about heartbreak, desperation, broken-down pickup trucks, poor decision-making, war, politics, frolicking in a grassy meadow, payin for it later, addiction, friendship, Eskimos, corporate greed, keepin awake till dawn, and women. 10 MP3 Songs FOLK: Modern Folk, FOLK: Traditional Folk Show all album songs: Bone Songs Details: Jeremiah Clark is a Baltimore-based folksinger and songwriter, a desperate criminal and conman who has been making music for the last five years with his band, the Lighter Thieves. They have performed throughout the mid-Atlantic region, as well as spent a summer performing in Alaska, trying to win over good-hearted, simple-minded folks with a blend of subversive preaching and the devils music. They sound like a raggedy pack of washed-up hepcats, out for one more prowl. They play with a certain abandon, and a little desperation, like they just realized that the whiskey has run out, and they wont be able to go buy anymore until they finish the show. They have little regard for authority figures, and seek to incite rebellion under the guise of "social protest". Their main goal, however, seems to be to excite the womenfolk, whilst reminding the boys of the dangers of excited womenfolk. Beware this band, who have ruined so many hitherto virtuous souls. "Bone" is the first solo recording from Jeremiah Clark. It is a collection of folksongs written and sung by Jeremiah, accompanied by his guitar and harmonica, and by Pa Clark on upright acoustic bass and harmonies. The songs deal with such timeless subjects as heartbreak, desperation, broken-down pickup trucks, poor decision-making, war, politics, frolicking in a grassy meadow, payin for it later, addiction, friendship, Eskimos, corporate greed, keepin awake till dawn, and women. Anyone who cant identify with this stuff oughta check and make sure hes still above ground. Good luck to ya.
