In her latest CD, Stoic Abandon, Lojo Russo desires us to take a chance. To think outside of the music box and believe that these words, stoic and abandon, are not opposites, but merely a reflection of themselves, of life. Using powerful vocals, rich guitar work and enticing lyrics she captures ordinary experiences and makes them something extraordinary. Im Sorry takes a simple phrase and gives it a depth of such breathtaking understatement. Girrrl involves us in her revelation of an adult tomboy finding her inner girl. And, something as insignificant as the smell of juniper triggers a longing so vital that youll wonder, when was the Last Time I Thought About California? Its the balance; soft/loud, rock/folk, stoic/abandon that makes this album adventurous. Lojo Russo makes it human.
