After completing schooling in Perth, she travelled to New Orleans, Louisiana to study music and drama at University. She has worked with greats such as Aaron Neville and the Neville Brothers, And just to prove she's an emerging talent, she has also been invited to participate in the 2004 CMAA College of Country Music, for two weeks leading up to the Tamworth Country Music Festival in January. "It's an honour to be selected from such an amazing pool of talent," Ronni said. Her first single You Win...You Lose taken from her EP Bridging The Gap, has received a lot of support from radio and media. To coincide with the upcoming release of her second single Happy New Year, Ronni has begun filming her first video clip, just in time for the New Year celebrations.

NEWS - November 2003 - Working with MARK DONOHOE (of MAGNIFICENT SEVEN fame) as co-producer of her debut EP, independent WA country singer RONNI RAE RIVERS shows her musical diversity on Bridging The Gap. Being from Australian and Texan heritage prompted the title of RONNI RAE'S EP as she bridges the gap between her very country US and urban Australian backgrounds. "The Australian country side of it is a little bit more folky and it's quite different from American country, where the American side is more the hoedown, honky tonk sound, so on the EP there is a mixture of both." Highlighting RONNI RAE'S strong vocals and musicianship, the EP ranges from the reminiscing Haven't Things Changed to the contemporary feel of her first radio single You Win...You Lose to the aching Long Long Time. Ronni says it is a mix of everything she likes. The first single, You Win...You Lose is a crowd favourite and has "attitude", which is a contrast to the next single to be released, Happy New Year as it is "emotional, cry in your pretzels kind of stuff". Ronni says her love for country music stems from the stories in the lyrics. "It's like when people didn't have the influence of television and they would sit around the radio and you would create your own picture in your head. You listen to the words and it brings you into the song. You might never have been to a place that somebody is singing about but after you've heard the song, you feel like you have. You have lived a little piece of that life." Studying music and drama at university in New Orleans, she has worked with the likes of AARON NEVILE and the NEVILLE BROTHERS who she says have shown her how she could come out of her comfort zone and push the barriers. "It has changed the ways I would interpret songs, as I would stay within a safe zone, they take risks, so they've probably taught me to take a few more risks." The new album for Ronni will be released early next year after the Tamworth Country Music Festival. "We'll play those songs that are yet to be released and use the audience as a sounding board and see what people are responding to, that way we can see what the next single should be." Ronni says she was impressed with the loyalty of country music fans that she witnessed during the 2003 Tamworth Festival, and she will be returning next year to get her name known on the East Coast.
