Is it the "Top of the South" or is it the "Middle of the East"? Until now, V-A has been represented by artists with such a universal appeal that the geographic and social aspects were never truly represented...Enter VA's FRONTLINE with their debut album " 18 MP3 Songs HIP HOP/RAP: Southern Style, HIP HOP/RAP: Hip Hop Details: The collective sound of the five emcees that make up the group Frontline aims to change the hip-hop music industry by putting the Mid-Atlantic region on the map. Their music incorporates the true essence and characteristics of Virginia, focusing more on many of the local musical influences and pride of their home state. A main motivation for Frontline is to dispel many of the myths that emcees from other regions take when describing their time spent in the South and in Virginia particularly, and to redefine the "Dirty-South". "It used to be that the King of New York, was more or less the chief rocker of all hip-hop, now that Jay-Z has lost his enthusiasm for rap, there is no one that can honestly take that figurative baton, as he did from Biggie, and hold the throne, which has opened it up for other regions to introduce a unique flavor to the rap game, but what we are finding out is, that even as these regions emerge, the "bling-bling" and "Gangsta" eras have had more influence on them than hip-hop itself, the essence of it all... this album is our contribution in helping to bring back true hip-hop". This coupled with the ambition to dispel the stereotype that southern rap artists must have gimmicks or sound simple in their style in order to sell, has moved FRONTLINE to poise themselves as the next big thing" says Jones of his vision for his label and FRONTLINE. "I think we will be that faction that will help to end the 'Bling Bling' era of hip-hop, Jones continues, "CNI wants to take it back to the time when rap was pure, an outlet that performers took seriously". The five emcees that make up Virginia's FRONTLINE met while attending high school in Amelia, VA. Saratoga and his cousin Boo-Da, had teamed with a number of emcees while looking for the fit that ultimately was solidified by J. Brown, Chosen and his cousin Focus.
