He has the versatility to go from hip-hop to the corporate world without missing a beat. Don has a Southern California flair and like-ability that keeps audiences of all ages howling for more. Born in Yakima, Washington, Don Barnhart Jr. moved to Southern California at an early age. He went from ice hockey to surfing and then found his interest in performing arts. His involvement in theatre began in high school, creating a solid foundation for his future in comedy. It was then, while his father was directing Mork and Mindy, Don spent his after school time on the set hanging with and learning from comic legends Jonathan Winters and Robin Williams. Out of school and looking for a job, Don worked as a doorman at The Comedy Magic Club in Hermosa Beach, CA. As luck would have it, the house emcee got sick and Don Barnhart Jr. was literally thrown onstage in front of Dana Carvey and Dennis Miller. Using his improv ability, Don filled in and that was the opportunity that launched his career. With such great coaches, its no wonder Don took the next step and became one of the first comedians to graduate from The Second City Conservatory in Los Angeles. From well written, thought provoking and word wise material to goofy physicalities and improvisational twists, its no wonder why Don is in constant demand as a headliner at the top comedy clubs across the country. Barnhart also performs for the USO and Comics On Duty around the world for the troops in Afghanistan, The Middle East, Asia, Europe and the Persian Gulf, and he works over 20 weeks a year for Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines. In his spare time, Don is also an accomplished writer, director and actor. Barnhart has just released his new DVD, The Click Click Club which includes his original sketch show, The South Bay Boys that he directed and co-wrote along with his short film, What Are The Odds? which is currently making the film festival circuit and Don has just finished writing, directing and starring in the feature film, China Dolls.
