Dear Reader, Are you an animal lover? Have you ever owned a cat, a dog or a bird? Maybe you're that special parent who allow their children to acquire a non-traditional pet. While those facts may help define your reasons for starting a pet sitting business, there is more involved - quite a bit more. In fact the reasons for starting a pet sitting business are just as varied as the people who do it and the pets entrusted to their care. The most important thing to remember is that it IS a business and not a hobby. It's a good bet that you may have cared for a pet in the past. Most of us have either been a pet sitter for a friend or family member when they have gone off on vacation. If you enjoyed the experience and found it rewarding that's a good plus in your favor. Or maybe you have asked someone to mind your pet under the same circumstances. Hopefully that was a good experience as well and you were able to enjoy yourself without the burden of worrying about your pet. If you are considering pet sitting for any reason, consider the following: 1. Why do you want to pet sit? 2. Where do you find people to pet sit for? 3. What resources should you have in place ahead of time? Answering these questions is the first step toward creating a pet sitting business. And, since you are still with us it's a good bet you have a serious interest in pursuing pet sitting as a business. It's great you are considering pet sitting as a part or full time business.
