Psychological casio low-fi mental pop. 11 MP3 Songs FOLK: Alternative Folk, POP: Quirky Details: "If Daniel Johnston had a better voice, it might sound like this. A series of finely crafted, but ultimately obscure, pop-quirk songs. Composed in 1991, the songs are layered atop a Casio rhythm track. This gives it a low-fi, manufactured-sound type atmosphere. Like a video game or music box. The lyrics hint at a skewed mental logic - some kind of private cosmology is underlying everything. It makes sense, but doesn't really make any sense. There is a visit to the psychiatrist in "The Appearance of Dr. Ego". In which the doctor says "Present yourself as a metaphor it's easier that way..." A twisted child's game in "Scissors, Paper, Stone". An invective against Le Corbusier in "Modular Guy". In which the author says "I want to be 226 cm high" A glimpse into the mind of a fast-food worker in "The Formation of a Multitude". In which the narrator states "I see people. 10,000 people. In line" And many more fun filled hours of music listening enjoyment." Keller Irwin, Much Aplomb about Nothing Background: Kern Ramble is based in Austin, Texas. All songs are written and performed solely by Kern Ramble and recorded in his home studio.
