Realizing that they Only lived a mile from each other, they started writing comical radio skits and commercials for broadcast. After hosting several comedy clubs, Steve was introduced to Jennifer Feliciano, Jeff brought in his brother Dave, and the four of them started to perform Theater Games! John Gradick, Steve's previous boss at the radio conglomerate and now next-door neighbor, also got in on the action. It was during this time that they started recording material that would change their reputable images forever! During the 9/11 attacks of the World Trade Center, in a dazed confused shock, Jeff knocked on Steve's door at 9:30 in the evening with the concept to record a song parody that would be heard across the country and become the #1 Internet Comedy Song on MP3.COM for five straight months! "The Bin Laden Banana Boat Song" became the top hit on their CD "The Afghan Files," and pretty soon skits like "Muslim Barbie" and "The Afghanistan Dating Game" became some of the most requested downloads on the Internet. The four then started focusing on promoting a 'live' show that could present their studio material in with a new trend that was just starting to hit the comedy market, Interactive Theater Games. While setting up performance dates, the four of them started getting cast in separate performances. Steve started getting lead roles in independent film projects, Jen was performing Stand-up and raising a family, while Dave and Jeff were performing Shakespeare and also in the middle of starting their own families. In 2002, Steve moved the MCG office to sunny Sarasota, Florida, and The Misplaced
