Add to this guitar, mandolin, banjo, and double bass (plus, here and there, a tablespoon of electric crunch) and you have LONG FOR THIS WORLD, the new album by Jeremy Lloyd. Recorded in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and backed by Sam Crowe, formerly of the Kentucky Headhunters, LONG FOR THIS WORLD explores a variety of shapes and moods undulating along on a current of rootsy lyricism. Call it folk with teeth. A native of Western Pennsylvania, educated in Michigan and North Carolina, and living and working in two additional states and continents since, Jeremy has lived for the past several years in East Tennessee. By day he works as a naturalist and environmental educator inside Great Smoky Mountains National Park and has written an occasional essay or three about the experience. Songs, too.
