First, picking up the sax in grade school and later moving on to the guitar. When he wasn't practicing long hours in his room, he would be programming on a Radio Shack Tandy 1000 PC. This proved to be great experience that would help him create, produce, and record his music today. While attending Columbia College in Chicago, he spent most of his time in the rehearsal rooms sharpening his style, which is a fusion of smooth jazz/latin/pop textures. After playing a few years with local bands, Jeff decided to record a compilation of original works that he had been working on over the years. He setup in a small room with his trusty homemade computer, some guitars, and a keyboard and the resulting cd is Boundless.
