Bio/

Manila born Noel Loric, started his musical adventure, through the urging of his mom, by taking classical piano lessons at an early age. But Noel had other ideas and wanted an acoustic guitar. However, his parents would not get him one because they feared it would interfere with his piano lessons. So secretly he bought his own and began practicing in his closet. He finally convinced his parents that he loved the guitar and was able to practice freely. Through high school and early college life he was much like other teens and began playing mostly rock, blues and folk music. In hindsight even these styles helped influence his music today. In addition to music he had another love, pets. He began to care for them which inevitably led to his decision to become a veterinarian. Musically at this time he was exposed to the music of George Benson and the modern jazz scene. He knew right away that he found for what he was looking. The jazz bug hit him and from that time on there was no turning back. Unfortunately, he had to put his musical career on hold to finish a demanding degree in Veterinary Medicine during the 80's. After graduation, the political instability of the times made it hard to apply his degree, there was no demand for vets so he immigrated to the U.S. and started on his professional career in Philadelphia/New York area. There he met his wife, while he was assisting his uncle, who was also a vet. Together they decided to move to West Palm Beach, Florida and established a practice. In South Florida he found a home again. Latin beats and Jazz echoed around, his musical juices began to surface again and he started doing small gigs and played with a couple of bands. Noel soon joined ASCAP (American Society of Composers and Producers) and started to develop his own style. Through dedication to his craft he has become a premier acoustic guitarist and continues to expand as an artist. "Wayward Jazz" is a perfect melding of Noel's changing influences accented by the acoustic guitar. His debut album "First Dance" is a memoir of this musical journey and an introduction to his inimitable musicianship. Note: Noel's dedication not only extends to his music, he hasn't forgotten his love for animals and our responsibility to them. It is with this thought in mind that he hopes to raise and donate some of the proceeds from his music to various animal welfare organizations.
