The album shifts between reminiscing, celebrating, exploring politics and heartbreak. A wide range of musical styles have been used to make it an eclectic mixture of blues, folk, funk, country, reggae and rock influenced sounds. Instrumentation includes acoustic guitars, electric guitars, fretless bass, double bass, drums and vocal harmonies. The players were hand-picked for their unique style and enthusiasm. Many of the players on the recording have given their time for free, making Seasons Will Pass a real labor of love. The mood in the studio was relaxed with folk producer/musician Steve Vella at the desk of Dog and Bear Studios. The album is one of changing seasons. The music speaks of the best of times and the worst of times. Themes around the environment, indigenous issues and war sit alongside narratives concerning gratitude, love and well-being. Adam balances serious themes with a silky smooth delivery.
