Their unique arrangements of songs from the 50's to modern day have won the respect of fans everywhere. They have performed with some of the most respected names in the entertainment industry including Little Richard, The Platters and Burton Cummings, to name a few. Their first two independent CDs have helped to spread the word of their talent around the world have sold thousands to fans on every continent. In collaboration with legendary music producer, Jack Richardson, The Essentials first CD, "Oh What A Night!" took no time at all to reach the top of the indie charts and created a huge demand for a follow up album. The result was a second CD "The Essentials ...And Then Some " which garnered the group a host of glowing reviews and several prestigious industry nominations. With two consecutive home runs, the group decided to try a little twist. They recorded a live show in Sault Ste Marie, Ontario and the result was their third album "The 'Bare' Essentials". In 2000, The Essentials were cast in the CBS movie A Holiday Romance, starring Andy Griffith, Naomi Judd, and Gerald McRaney. More recently, they were cast in a national ad campaign for Bell XpressVu, which featured them singing the Canadian National Anthem. This sparked several invitations from both the Toronto Raptors as well as the Toronto Blue Jays to sing both the U.S. and Canadian anthems at their home games. Currently, The Essentials are based in Toronto and are working on their 4 th CD. A release date has not yet been confirmed but is expected for early 2008.
