Details: With his combination of haunting piano melodies and heavy synthesized instrumentation, Michael Valentino has created a style that resembles both new age and forms of film composition. After viewing the film Jaws at the age of 5, Michael wanted to attempt to compose musical scores to accompany films and documentaries although he could not read music. Using his own form of shorthand, he began writing original works at age twelve. While in high school, he developed a style called percussion scaling which allowed him to play full versions of hard rock songs from artists like Metallica and Ozzy Osbourne that appealed to both rock and classical music fans. In 2005, he was commissioned to write a version of Anita Bakers 1986 hit Sweet Love. In 2008, Michael released his first effort: Diary of a Libra. The eleven dark and beautiful tracks provide listeners with a theatrical, ambient quality often heard in film scores and by new age artists.
