"Relic" (because he represents his ancestors) has been an active member of the Bay Area hip-hop scene for many years. He linked with DJ Descend in early 97' and went on to make his debut album "Street Scholars." (98') He spent the next years perfecting his stage show by performing at a number of events, from small benefits to large concerts. Relic co-founded Street Scholars Records and Entertainment (SSR) alongside Sergio Monleon in 2001, the two promoted several events in the East Bay while continuing work on upcoming projects. Relic has expanded from recording and performing into a top-notch producer and engineer and runs the official Street Scholars Records studio: the 'Kitchen'. His strong creative ability ensures that Street Scholars moves in a marketable and creative direction, all the while developing a powerful and unique new sound. One of Relic's main goals is to make music that liberates the minds of the imprisoned. "When I was growing up I felt like the fact that I thought for myself made me a social minority and through music I found freedom, so the least I can do is try to free the next man." Relic recently finished his new solo album "Note to Self," which is a coming together of his work from 1999-2004. This 20 track album has a number of features, including Pep Love, MC Zion, and Eyecue (Hobo Junction) to name a few. This is an album for those who used to cut class to think for themselves. If you've seen Relic perform, chances are you've experienced songs from this project. Aside from his solo career Relic, along side Unity Lewis and Binghi Ghost, is one third of the trinity that makes up a reggae/hip-hop fusions group called Elementactics. Currently the trio has been in the studio recording their debut album, which is soon to catch the world off guard. As an artist, and a record producer Relic is on course to make a big impact on the global community. So keep your eyes, ears, and hearts open.....
