At that time, competition was not just over The Bridge, but also down the street, in the building and even right next door. Although merely 1 square mile, Queensbridge has spawned many hip hop heavyweights including Marley Marl, Nas, Mobb Deep and many others. Growing up, Hotday spent weekends in the summer at Queensbridge Park for the weekly DJ and MC battles. It was there that he honed his craft while being mentored by the legendary Orr Brothers. At just 13 years old, Hotday burned up the 1s and 2s for the first time in front of almost 1,000 screaming fans. Amazed by the talent and dexterity of such a young person, the crowds' enthusiastic applause cemented Hotday's career path. As the years passed, Hotday continued to move crowds in park jams and DJ contests. Hotday was and continues to be firmly rooted in hip hop, but his undeniable talent extends well beyond that realm. While still just a teenager, Hotday's big break came when he produced the remix for New Edition's 'Once in a Lifetime Groove'. The innovative and progressive style of the remix caught the attention of many industry insiders and Hotday found himself in great demand. Hotday went all over the country touring with Eric B. and Rakim to promote the now classic album, 'Let the Rhythm Hit Em'. Having also produced the original single 'Let the Rhythm Hit Em', the tour provided Hotday with invaluable experience both creatively and business wise. With a national tour under his belt, Hotday returned to New York with even greater confidence. He did sets at some of New York's hottest clubs: Latin Quarters, Nells, Roxy, Exit, the Tunnel and many others.
