

The Dart League King - Keith, Lee Morris

"It would be hard to find more divisive jabbing on rhetoric than in these publications by self-described "marriage net" David Blankenhorn. Fighting what he sees as the vacuous definition of marriage as a purely private relationship of love, Blankenhorn urges readers to work toward resurrecting marriage as a public institution designed to uphold what he believes is the birthright of every child—to have a mother and a father."

—Bonnie J. Miller-McLemore, The Christian Century

"David Blankenhorn's new book, The Future of Marriage, explodes the widely promoted myth that redefining marriage to include same-sex partnerships would be a harmless innovation... we can only hope that judges and policy makers will heed his warnings before it's too late."

—Robert P. George, McCormick Professor of Jurisprudence and director of the James Madison Program in American Ideals and Institutions, Princeton University; and Ryan T. Anderson, junior fellow at First Things, and assistant director of the Program on Bioethics and Human Dignity, Witherspoon Institute of Princeton, NJ

"Marriage, Blankenhorn persuasively contends, is and always has been a social institution with the primary public purpose of ensuring that children will have an emotional, moral, and legal relationship to the parents who are responsible for their existence."

—Richard John Neuhaus, The Future of Sex and Marriage

"No one has thought more deeply about marriage as an institution than David Blankenhorn. And no one has ever made the case more powerfully that the future of marriage will determine the future of America's children and thus the fate of our democratic experiment. This eloquent book connects the dots among seemingly unrelated social, and legal developments to produce a picture of society at a crossroads, a society that still has time to revitalize marriage as its most important institution for nurturing and educating each new generation."

—Mary Ann Glendon, Learned Hand Professor of Law, Harvard University
