Outlines a philosophically viable theology for the thoroughly evolutionary world we occupy today. Far from merely reinvigorating relativism, postmodernism has detected and expressed in our time a powerful nihilating process of which truth and reality itself are the final casualties, and with these morality and religion. Beginning from the theological reaches of philosophy, this 2000 book argues that gods played a crucial part in modern philosophy, even when it was most critical of them, that the dominant nihilism of Derrida is really an excessive and misleading outcome of a contemporary philosophy which could otherwise resonate with all that is best in our evolutionary image of the universe, that moralists who turn to art in order to overcome the fact-value version of this deadly dualism do not thereby rule out religion, and that a Christian theology which recognises the evolutionary and historical conditions of faith and revelation is once again producing a theology that builds upon the best of contemporary philosophy and science.
