Wood has searched for his calling in various environments selling books door-to-door, working in oil refineries and chemical plants, and helping his grandfather run a bent can grocery store. But working as a singer/songwriter in Nashville tops them all. His debut album Worth Having features 10 original songs backed by various musicians, many of who are friends he has met since moving to Music City in the mid-1990s. Tennessee is Woods 11th state to call home during his 31-year journey. He graduated from Belmont University in Nashville with a Music Business degree and has been trying to find his niche in the music industry ever since. Worth Having, produced by John Van Meter, will be released June 9 at East Nashvilles 3 Crow Bar with a concert featuring Wood backed by Jamie Hartford, Rick Lonow, Dave Roe, Molly Thomas and Chris West, with an opening set by Ballhog! Wood plays guitar and mandolin in Ballhog!, an eight-piece band that features original songs and traditional bluegrass instruments alongside drums and a horns section. Ballhog! has toured regionally for 5 years and shared the stage with acts such as Patti Griffin, Todd Snider, Will Kimbrough, and Scott Miller. His album includes not only Ballhog! band members but also friends and acquaintances from the local music scene including Jamie Hartford, Todd Snider and Chris Roberts. Wood credits Van Meter, who has previously produced acts including Johnny Stats and Blue Merle, for the direction of the album. He signed the longtime friend onto his project because of their similar tastes in music. I have tried to write stuff that you dont hear people writing songs about a lot, Wood said. I wanted to almost be different for the sake of being different while learning the trade. But now that has grown to the point where Ive found my own voice.
