from Byron Bay, Australia, Cheynne Murphy is a star on the rise, with radio support and rave reviews for his very special recording - Firesongs for the Soul. What started out as an innocent recording session taking place between friends around a campfire has now transformed into a fully fledged international release - with a little help from the internet of course. The artist in question is Cheynne Murphy and the result is this beautiful, harmony based acoustic recording with retro stylising and splashes of strings and horns. The recording happened at SAE in Byron Bay as well as a couple of local home studios and involved an eclectic mix of local songwriters and musicians. With a sound and production not dissimilar to recordings from the 60s or 70s the music evokes similarities with recordings from Neil Young, Crosby Stills Nash and Young, Ryan Adams and Australias own Bernard Fanning and Pete Murray. Firesongs

For the Soul is an accomplished effort from this Byron Shire artist who already has national airplay, television performances and major supports to his credit. The recording process involved a lot of spontaneous unrehearsed performances from local musicians helping capture a rich organic feel. In fact this is a totally home-grown production right down to the mastering and artwork. It makes sense to do things locally. Byron Bay is such a magical place and as such the recording process was full of these magic moments. One day the engineer EJ and I were driving in the hills picking up some overdubs mobile style at friends houses. We went around to record a trumpet player in Possum Creek, John Hoffman. EJ plays drums and couldn't believe John was in Buddy Rich's band for 15 years, and played with Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald amongst others he was blown away John has this amazing house in possum creek and we set him up blowing his horn out to the green hills. We were going for a wild-west sound in the song Wild Lonesome Feeling Daniel Boone style. He really nailed it. Fire songs for the Soul will be released digitally in November 2008 (available at I-tunes of course) and will be toured on the East Coast over the next 9 months.
