Details: Robert Crisp has been writing music since he was sixteen, hunched over his grandmother's ancient upright piano. Since then, he has branched out into composing for different instruments, using recording programs such as Reason to fully realize his musical dreams. Of his first album Time Slowly Passing, Robert says, "These songs were all written to express the joys and sorrows of the last two years. During this time, my first child was born, I visited England, and got more serious about my work as a teacher. The songs reflect those changes." Robert also hopes the songs resonate with other people. "I like instrumental mood music," he says. "It speaks to the soul." Take a listen to Time Slowly Passing, and let the songs find a place in your soul, too.
