His Mother Valerie Fawcett full Tlingit and his father James Strang of Tlingit. Leaving Morgan a rare Tlingit. A long ancestral line of Matriarchs of Alaskan Royalty. Morgans Tlingit name is Sheens given to him by his Grandfather Harvey Marvin this is a name from the Eagle Box House. In 2006 Stopping at the Trees of Mystery Museum and gift Shop. This is a Park on Hwy 101 of Northern California, while on a road trip with family, Morgan was offered a Native wooden flute to play by a museum employee (who later became a dear friend) After hearing Morgan play for a few minutes the museum curator asked how long he had been playing the Native flute? This was actually his first exposure to the Native flute. Morgans Great Grandfather Tommy Joe Redmon gifted Morgan this flute to Morgan on his return trip through we stopped and picked it up, this was for Morgans 14th birthday. Morgan has been playing the flute ever since that day. He has been called a natural flute player by many, but Morgan refers to his music as Ancestral Memories. When asked from where his songs come, Morgan explains Every flute has a voice but with one element missing Breath I add the breath to the voice of the flute and that breath comes from my heart. In the past couple years Morgan has played his flutes from Alaska, down the west coast and as far east as Memphis, Tennessee. Many people have enjoyed the spiritual quality of Morgans soulful sounds, but Morgan would say his music is personal. Just to watch Morgan play his flutes many say is a spiritual experience. Because of the flute, Morgan has met many exceptional people, each having brought their own special qualities to influence this young man on his Journey. Summer of 2007 saw the release of Morgans first CD ancestral Memories. Morgan went back to his home town to put on a Concert with Arvel Bird for FASD awareness. In April of 2005 at the age of 14 years old Morgan started an awareness program for FASD. We are all looking forward to his next CD to be available in June 2008 Tears of our Fathers Morgans Music has been said to bring Peace and healing to the heart and mind.
