You are a creature in the worlds waters. What are you? A piranha ... a sunfish ... a dolphin? Whats pulsing through your headphones while you swim? Aquanaria is the long-awaited music collection from the top composing team of all things underwater, Eddie Freeman and Marta Victoria. As Icarus Music, they are already well known for scoring films for National Geographic, PBS/Nature and Discovery Channel; as well as for painting exciting soundscapes for the Georgia Aquarium and the Long Beach Aquarium of the Pacific. It is with pride that they now release their first soundscape cd. Water resonates with us so keenly that we wanted to dedicate an entire cd to the concept of all water as one living entity, explains Eddie, whose haunting guitar licks and aching strings give the music its dreamy, organic feel. So we created these musical waterscapes to take your imagination for a swim, adds Marta, whose percussion and melodies permeate the cd. Aquanaria is the concept they came up with that, like Gaea, personifies all Earths water as one life force. The cds aural interpretations capture liquid blue realms filled with life; like the furtive darting of Clownfish through coral, the mesmerizing undulation of an octopus across the sea floor, or the majestic rise of a blue whale leading her newborn to the surface for its first breath. Aquanaria encourages imaginary journeys with its lush textures, exotic sounds and primal yearning. Rhythms ebb and flow, carrying one through the Amazon River to the Great Barrier Reef.
