Singing is how I express myself and how I interpret the situations and conditions I encounter on this life's journey. I started playing guitar when I was 14, but singing was always my first love. I went to college for music performance and studied everything I could about music. I remain grateful to all of the inspiring teachers I met during my formal education. I also studied operatic singing. It was challenging and invigorating and I was keenly aware of my good fortune to be studying music. However, my heart always led me back to folk music. Simple, elegant, upbeat or peaceful, I seek to inspire with my songs. I want to find the emotional vulnerabilities of this human life and turn all weaknesses and virtues of our brief existence into songs that connect us to each other. From the subtlest beauty of nature to the complicated intricacies of the human heart and mind, I want to turn it all into something beautiful a beautiful song.
