Details: Suzanne Grzanna From New York - Paris - Japan - Russia - Los Angeles - Chicago, Suzanne Grzanna has made a prominent world wide name for herself. She has performed at prestigious halls such as the Blue Note, Birdland, Preservation Hall, Cinegrill, and the Hollywood Bowl. Suzanne has had sit-ins with players such as Frank Morgan, Dave Hazeltine, Bryan Lynch, Betty Carter, Ray Brown Jr., Charles McPherson, John Hurd, and Jeff Goldblum, to name a few. Her unique talents of not only being a dazzling saxophonist but also a sultry vocalist ... that can make you melt in your seat. Suzanne Grzanna began her jazz diva career at age five when she studied piano. She grew up in a small suburb of Milwaukee, WI and flourished in music from the beginning. Her parents, Don and Maureen Grzanna, are notable musicians who taught her the discipline of the craft. Throughout her childhood, Suzanne won various awards not only in jazz, but also in classical music. Ms. Grzanna even participated in the Milwaukee Symphony Chorus starting at the age of eighteen. College was a must for the aspiring musician, and after graduation proceeded to follow her dream of starting her own jazz quartet. In 1994, Suzanne Grzanna released her first album titled "The Cat's Meow." This put her on the map and gave her the opportunities to perform around the United States. Her video "The Cat's Meow" also got rave reviews on BET on Jazz. This introduced her not only to the US, but also to the world. Soon afterward, Ms. Grzanna released her next album titled "Fly Me to the Moon." This album got the attention of Billboard Magazine, which wrote a fabulous review. The offers of releasing an album overseas came flying in from such countries as Japan, Brazil, and Southeast Asia to name a few. Not only did Suzanne get attention from record labels, but the film community started to take notice. In December of 2003, "My Santa Baby" was released followed with "Simply Sunday" in 2005. Now, not only is Suzanne's music being played in films, but also her on-camera presence is reaching the silver screen. Suzanne Grzanna's sizzling saxophone and sultry vocals will leave you spellbound. DIVA RECORDS, LLC, P.O.
