He had performed a great deal in his youth in the southern New Jersey area, but had stopped performing for many years during which he pursued careers in teaching, mental health and information technology (an industry he still works in), and also having a family. Craig rediscovered writing and performing in the past two years. He has been a featured performer at several venues in the greater Boston area. He uses an acoustic finger-picking style for most of his compositions which in general are poetic explorations of relationships. In his youth Craig studied folk and acoustic blues guitar with famed blues artist Philadelphia Jerry Ricks. He also won a performing and songwriting contest at a young age at the Ocean City, New Jersey Folk Festival and studied creative writing in college with poet Nikki Giovanni.
