Details: Jason is a Boston local, growing up in Revere; a city just north of the major Massachusetts hub. Through the years, he always knew that he was destined for more than his hometown could offer. Music was always a driving force in his life, from playing saxophone through his younger years to teaching himself guitar during his high school years. Now sometime after his college graduation from Wentworth Institute of Technology in 2002 where he studied Electronic Engineering, he's looking forward to pursuing his dreams and trying to make his mark on the music world. During his high school years, while he was teaching himself guitar, Jason played saxophone in a SKA band named SKA (Something Known As). Their main influence at that time was the Mighty Mighty Bostones. This endeavor, however, didn't last too much past his graduation. With members going their separate ways, the band was dissolved and there wasn't much music in his life for a little over a year. Try as he might to start another band, SKA or otherwise, things inevitably fell through and finally Jason decided the only way he would be able to pursue his dream was to do it himself. He began to use his self taught knowledge on guitar to write songs. What he would do with them once they were written, he wasn't sure, but that he had to write them was all he knew. This was also the first time that Jason began to truly sing, outside of places like his car and the shower, and from what others are saying, that was a good decision. His music covers a very wide range of genres and has been described as very eclectic. Some people have said his acoustic sound is reminiscent of John Mayer, or Howie Day and although he has been known to cover a

Howie Day song or two, writing in this style was something he did long before knowing of these popular artists. Expanding his range to other genres, Jason's songs now include more of a rock, pop or dance feel to them, every one of which are a dream to listen to.
