His place in the scheme of modern American song is a present day verse and found melodies, but not quite fully divorced from a familiar tone of the American Folk song and Rock n Roll. If there is a reason to consider Dan Janisch's music it might be to derail the ever present idea that A type of music is for A type of person and so on, split down the line. Whether one be a rocker, a hip hopper, a punker, an americana-er, a hippie, a square, a 15 year old, a 60 year old, a cop, a robber, rich or poor, etc. Sometimes it might be good to shove some of that B#LS#T out of the way and connect differently; see were all people. Dan Janisch's music is a fine place to do that; its music intended for all the people somehow. "If John Steinbeck had written music, he'd have written music like Dan Janisch..." - Freight Train Boogie "...impossible to fit into a particular stylistic niche, and he's certainly not just another aging sidewalk performer..." - All Music Guide "He gives broken hearts some lovely places to hide..." - LA Weekly
