Siiri Sisask, one of the most intriguing stars of Estonia, sings about life, death, and love. 8 MP3 Songs

WORLD: Eastern European, JAZZ: World Fusion Details: Siiri Sisask - voc Kristjan Randalu - piano Carsten Netz - woodwinds live electronics Pascal Niggenkemper - bass Bodek Janke - drums percussion "It now appears that the multifaceted rsum of Siiri Sisask for the last decade and a half has been but a dress rehearsal for a return to her true musical home, a house shared by wonderful partners who have adopted her words and melodies as if they were their own. In his intricate arrangements Kristjan Randalu captures the subtle shadings and emotional hinterlands of her lyrics. At times his layers of lyrical minimalism create a medium for her message, at other times they ramp up the emotional content. The songs themselves are more like poems than ballads. The dynamic range of the music is extraordinarily wide: quiet nuanced passages are pitted against dramatic and surging figures as dictated by the structural development of the piece. Randalus piano playing, always unexpected and refreshing, and Netzs at times dreamlike saxophone and clarinet sound provide the singular shading of the walls of this house, all framed by Langes meditative and rock-steady bass. The record is a surprisingly effective whole, the journey of a woman who has felt the sear of love and loss, and who after feelings of hopelessness and other tribulations has found an inner light, a connection to a wellspring of natural energy."
