Genie Timeline 2.0: Quality Free Backup For All

A lot of people have been asking where Ive been the past several months: why the blog has been void of updates, why EasyBCD 2.0 is taking so long, why the image gallery still hasnt been properly updated, and so on and so forth. With university was over and done with, I was supposed to have more time on my hands to dedicate to NeoSmart Technologies. If I had to point the finger of blame, it would rest squarely on Genie Timeline 2.0. For the past year, Genie-Soft (my current employer) has been working on a revolutionary new and free backup program. Anyone that has ever searched for a professional backup solution has probably experienced firsthand just how difficult it can be to find something fast, powerful, and easy to use and forget about being free, too. Timeline 2 pushes the idea of constant data protection with real-time monitoring of changes to your data and intelligently scheduled backups of your files. You dont schedule backups, they just happen in response to the modifications you make. You just run Timeline in the background, and youre instantly protected. Files are versioned, clustered, and indexed then intelligently purged as needed to save space. In geek terms, Timeline most-closely resembles a hybrid between version control systems and backup software. Like any good version control system, GTL keeps versions of all your old files, uses block-level differential backup for larger files such as PSTs, and tracks changes on the individual file level. But the entire process is automated and the all the capabilities and features are hidden behind an ostensibly simple GUI, with a web interface that lets you search all backed up data instantly. Of course, this isnt an unbiased recommendation: Ive been part of the Timeline development team from and am responsible for some of the lower-level components. Over the past year, Ive learned a lot designing and implementing some really incredible features in Timeline. Dont let the simple interface fool you, theres a lot of technology and sheer power under the hood and this is whats been keeping me busy. Timeline 2.0 is available 100 for free, making it a must-have for any Windows users out there looking to protect their data. With the price of external disks at an all-time low and the value of digital data skyrocketing upwards, theres no excuse to not have backups of your software.
