A rich recording weaving exquisite guitar instrumentals, a touch of blues, Irish, and ragtime, and some songs of the sea to foreshadow Murdock's later dive into maritime music. 12 MP3 Songs FOLK: Folk Blues, BLUES: Guitar Blues Details: Lee's fourth recording, Fertile Ground is strong on instrumental guitar music, with the ragtime "St Louis Tickle" and several traditional Irish, Scottish tunes, including two by Turlough O'Carolan. Fertile Ground featured a number of maritime tunes to foreshadow his later "plunge" into Great Lakes maritime music: The first release of "The Christmas Ship," plus a haunting vocal chorus singing "The Eastland," a song written by Tom Chris Kastle, to a melody by O'Carolan. Two more traditional songs with a maritime background are also featured -- "Lady Franklin's Lament" and "Lakes of Pontchartrain." The title song was written by Doug Miller when he worked as founder of the Adler House in Libertyville, Illinois. It's a lovely song which deserves to be heard, sung and recorded by more folks.
