

Dynamic Location Problems - Daniel Großjohann

Dynamic location problems were first formulated in the 1960`s. The idea was to enlarge the location planning problem by including time in the problem formulation. Pioneering work was done by A.S. Manne, who developed the SLOT heuristic procedure, an approach to solve the problem under the assumption of linearly growing market demands. There are different reasons to enlarge a static location problem into a dynamic problem by introducing several time periods. Main subject of this article is an mathematical approach to solve a capacitated dynamic location problem over a given (limited) number of periods. There are no restrictions to demand development over the periods. (That means there is no linear growth in demand needed like in older approaches).
