76 year old Great Grand Mother debuts her music carrier with this electrifying blend of African folk rythms and modern sounds. 7 MP3 Songs WORLD: African, WORLD: World Beat Details: News Release 76 year-old Great Grandmother Releases First CD In the past few years, the media has been awash with news of grandmothers giving birth to new babies; now comes news of a 76-year old Cameroonian great grandmother releasing her debut CD. In Cameroon, we would simply say, Wonders shall never end. This event adds new meaning to the saying, Its never too late. Mangie Susan Aleri Zama came to the United States in 2001 to help baby-sit her grand children. It was during this time that her son, Benjamin Zama, a musician, rediscovered her talents: Growing up, we took Moms singing for granted. I mean, Mothers just sang to their children or in the choir. Right? But listening to her sing to her grandchildren, my musicians ear heard something different, something special. So, I decided to take her into the studio to have her voice recorded just for fun. Little did Ben know what he had just started. Mangieh Susan sang so well the first time that the idea of immortalizing her voice on CD was born. Ben began in earnest to work on the music, and collaborated with a host of friends to produce the beautiful sounds and songs you hear on the Cd today. The work took about two years to complete, with trips to Boston and Washington DC. With the release of her CD, Mangieh Susan Aleri Zama is a pioneer in her age group to debut at age 76, and we definitely wish her long life and success in her new hobby.
