Details: Lets be honest folks Detroit isnt exactly the place you think of when youre asking yourself where the best Celtic music is from if youre not from there. Thats exactly the thing that makes people give The Kreellers a complete double-take. To be honest, it makes the boys laugh when people come up at nearly every show and say, Youre seriously from DETROIT? Yep. Ten+ years ago, brothers Derek Wade and Paul Bruno started the wheels in motion by playing local venues as a duo. Not surprisingly, the community grabbed hold of them and didnt let go. Their blend of traditional Irish music with original tunes would seem pretty cliché if you didnt know the brothers. Far from the soft-spoken ethereal lullabies people normally expect; the actual end product is something akin to a runaway 1969 GTO fueled by nitrous and Guinness. Good Celtic music needs to be 100 energy from first note to last. Not so with The Kreellers they go 110 and then some, and show no signs of stopping. The brothers put their heads together and asked themselves what would make a great show even better. A few phone calls later brought the third member into the fold. TK and Derek had known each other for nearly 10 years and the hyper percussionist shares a lifelong love for Celtic music. Since Celtic music is complete energy, TK was tossed like Brer Rabbit into the briar patch; first show with zero rehearsal time. The results shouldve been chaos, but instead was love at first sound between all involved. Every show since has gotten better and better. Playing venues all over the East Coast, Canada, and just about everywhere else, the band continues to attract fans. They try to give as much to the fans as the fans give.

Between sets, they can be found sharing a few pints with everyone, having a blast, and even having a few impromptu a-cappella sessions long after the pubs lights shut off. Every band worth its salt does it for the fans. Not every band recognizes that the blend of self love with fan love creates a symbiotic relationship that transcends any barriers no matter what the genre. This is the heart of The Kreellers. This is only the beginning. Strap in, hang on, and scream loud.
