Their debut release As the Stars Gather Light is a powerful statement by a young songwriter and a band that has distilled the sounds of rock, classical, punk, and folk music into their own blend. Bringing the music back to its roots, at its core it celebrates both the simple and the complex. This landscape is clearly visible and deeply personal on the album in songs like Home and Burn on. At other points the record moves seamlessly into inner reflection in songs like Dirty Streets and They say time, the latter an affirmation of the strength of those who can stand together. But above all, this album is a statement of belief. Gypsy Dave and The Stumpjumpers believe in the songs that they write and perform, and its the palpable energy derived from their faith that has propelled this band into the forefront of a burgeoning Americana music scene.
