According to Jerome Wilson in the March 2004 issue of Cadence: "Judging from her picture on the cover of BEHAVE YOURSELF, Elizabeth Soychak is a young woman, but her singing is mature beyond her years. She has a pure quality to her voice and she sings these songs with more understanding than a young singer usually does. Listen to the way she drifts through "September Song" and "Close Enough For Love," the kind of songs that normally only work in veteran hands. She also gets vibrant and haunting when dancing through uptempo songs like "Behave Yourself" and "Star Eyes." Even Billy Strayhorn's imperishable art song, "Lushlife," gets a memorable reading, full of youthful energy and worldly regret at the same time. Her musical accompaniment forms a delicate but strong backdrop to her singing. Elizabeth Soychak seems a very promising singer, the kind that might really flower on a big label under the current vocalist boom."
