Musical Compositions created on the computer using synthesizers, most of which are pretty melodic, but not particularly dancable. 9 MP3 Songs in this album (51:43) ! Related styles: ELECTRONIC: Soundscapes, ELECTRONIC: Experimental People who are interested in Wendy Carlos should consider this download. Details: Randy Chance started learning the accordion at age six, against his will. Skipping ahead slightly, hes toured in bands, worked on films, TV shows and jingles as guitarist, composer and engineer. You can visit his website (randychance.com) and click on the Resume button, if you want all that namedropping stuff (Who Ive Worked With, etc.). He grew up originally in Chicago, which probably gives him his love of blues and roots rock (Yeah, you sound like youre from Chicago, alright I was actually trying to sound English). Hes lived in Southern California long enough to develop a Studio Tan (no tan at all for those who dont get it). His tastes and influences are varied: Lots of fifties, sixties and seventies rock, blues, all kinds of folk music, and hes been very inspired by the possibilities of sound construction. He has a rootsy side and a hi-tech side, and both come out in his music. Theres also still the accordion, somewhere, there, in the back of his mind. This album, "Icarus Landed" is all about the "hi-tech" side. It was composed entirely on the computer by Randy. It shows his love of electronic music, sound construction and sonic landscapes. Some of these pieces were conceived, composed and produced using nothing but a laptop with software, a pair of headphones and a mouse.
