Related styles: COUNTRY: Americana, COUNTRY: Alt-Country Details: After three years and 300 plus shows, Matt Sayles, (co-founder and front -man of the upper-peninsula of Michigan band Frostbitten Grass) migrated to the High Desert of Central Oregon. Touring in the Northwest while working a variety of odd jobs, Sayles met up and toured nationally with Texas Native progressive blues guitarist, Francisco Mirabent from 2005 to late 2006. A Michigan Native, Sayles has played music for 15 years in a variety of capacities, from Dixieland-trombone, to blues, bluegrass, world music,jazz,annoying casio keyboard, and most recently accordion dobro. Back from his first national tour in late 2006 with Cisco Mirabent, Sayles settled in Cadillac Michigan to work on his next Album in relative isolation--until the winds blew Westward in the Spring of 2007, and he landed in Susanville, CA with a half-finished album, and a big backyard. In December of 2008, Sayles completed his most recent release on Philville Records: "Wilson's Hotel," Which features the eclectic singer songwriter at his best in exploring new instruments and thematic material that reflect his western travels and Michigan heritage. Sayles' approach to music has been described as "clever songwriting alongside rearranged classics-- a throwback style that knows good, old-fashioned storytelling...yet is utterly unpretentious about modernity.
