Evocative Pop 11 MP3 Songs POP: Piano, ROCK: Emo Details: Gregory Douglass possesses the voice of an angel - an angel in league with a devil, who conspires to seduce you with beauty." -Pamela Polston, Seven Days Gregory Douglass is an undeniable, pure talent. With 5 critically acclaimed, independent CDs under his belt, 25-year old Douglass delivers the songwriting skills of an "old soul" and "the voice of an angel" (Seven Days). His evocative amalgamation of contemporary folk, pop, and rock have been compared to Tori Amos, Jeff Buckley, Patty Griffin Rufus Wainwright. Douglass numerous accolades include being a finalist for both the 2005 International Songwriting Competition and the 2004 Independent Music Awards; he was the winner of the 2003 GrammyFest Awards in New York City, as well as the inaugural performer on the American Red Cross "Save A Life Tour in 2003. Douglass actively appears at listening rooms, clubs, festivals, and on campuses throughout the U.S., and has co-billed with They Might Be Giants, India Arie, Jason Mraz, Melissa Ferrick and many others. Douglass debut music video for I Wanted To Run, produced by Haverstick Films, recently aired on LOGO TV's NewNowNext. In November 2006, Douglass releases his sixth studio record Up & Away, immediately following the critical acclaim of his 2005 Stark release. Up & Away adorns a retrospective of Douglass life thus far, from the confessional chant-like opening track, Light Dont Shine to the epic finale, Up & Away, declaring that every new song seems an answer to prayers disregarded undermined / oh what a life. The sullen Into The Sunset summons its inspiration from the motion picture Brokeback Mountain, brooding over a promise untouched by forces unknown to lovers. Up & Away evokes a kinship in production to Douglass earlier releases, Teeter and Pseudo-Rotary but poses the secure sense of maturity that was introduced in his latest Stark release. I wanted to really capitalize on my love for harmonies in this record as I had yet to do so; thats the real signature for this one in my opinion, says Douglass. Douglass was born and raised in rural Vermont, winning local talent shows in his early teens. He taught himself to play the piano guitar and began writing his own songs during junior high. While attending Brewster Academy, a college-prep boarding high school in New Hampshire, Douglass composed and recorded the material for his first two albums. On graduation day, the schools Headmaster presented him with a music award publicly announcing that Gregory was the first student he would ever encourage NOT to go to college, advice that convinced him to immediately pursue music full-time. Today, Douglass has firmly established himself as a serious musical talent nation wide. With only six years of personal experience, Douglass has mastered the art of grassroots promotion with the help of his fan base. His last three recording efforts were financed almost entirely by the support of his fans pre-ordering records and contributing donations directly through his website. House Concerts hosted also by fans make up a large portion of his national touring. As a full-time independent artist, it is important to come up with intimate, new ways to remind people your still there, Douglass proclaims.
